In his speech before the caucus yesterday afternoon Senator Stone said that he admitted that Senator Clarke had a he admitted that Senator Clarke had a right to vote as he pleased on any measure. He said, however, that the office of President pro tempore had been given to Senator Clarke two years ago in order to aid the Arkansan in his fight for re-election to the Senate, and for the same reason, Senator Stone said, the office ought now to be given to Senator Pomerene, who is having a hard fight for re-election.

But before he gave his support to either candidate Senator Stone said

But before he gave his support to either candidate Senator Stone said that he would like to have two questions answered. These questions, he said, were as follows:
"Do you favor the shipping bill that is to be presented for consideration at the coming session of Congress?
"Do you favor cloture and will you support the democrats in their effort to obtain it?"

Senator Clarke spoke at length after his election had been announced, saying that he had no apology to offer for his vote on the ship purchase bill last session. He made no promises for the future, and made it plain that he intended to be guided by what he considered to be democratic principles. He admitted that he did not have the "best disposition possible," but added that he was not as black as he had been painted by some of his opponents. He denied the right of the democratic caucus to bind any senator upon such a measure as the ship purchase bill.

"If ever," he said, "the democratic caucus of the Senate by a two-thirds vote asks me to do a thing it has the right to ask me to do, and I cannot agree with it, I shall hand back to the caucus the honor it has bestowed upon me today."

pounding his questions. He should have asked each of these senators if they would guarantee to rule always in favor of democrats, regardless of the rules of the Senate or of the Constitution of the United States. He should have made these gentlemen pledge themselves never to vote to confirm any man nominated to be a federal judge unless that nominee, in advance, agreed that in all cases before him where there were democratic and republican lawyers and litigants he would render his decisions in favor of the democrats as against the republicans. If we are to have guarantees let us by all means extend their scope."

Only Seeks Democratic Support.

To this Senator Stone replied that every one knew that the administration was going to urge the enactment of a second to the controller of the Treasury.

The Attorney General recommended the disallowance on a misunderstanding of his authorization. It seems he suggested that, if possible, the prisoner be fitted with glasses without optical examination, but if the examination prove necessary, that the total expense for examination should not exceed $10.

J. B. Holohan, United States marshal for the northern district of California, made the expenditure. Senator Newlands of Nevada came to the defense of Senator Clarke, asserting that no democrat should be punished for holding fast to ancient democratic traditions. He contended that the government ownership of merchant ships was an advance in state socialism and that the democratic party had never committed itself to such a doctrine.

When the roll was called Senator Stone at first said that he would vote for Senator Walsh of Montana, since neither of the candidates had answered his questions. But later he changed his vote to Senator Pomerene. Senator Clarke and Senator Pomerene paid each other the courtesy of voting each for his opponent.

A "newtone," a new electric signal of musical character for motor-driven vehicles, was also shown, as well as what Mr. Droop characterized as "the last word in player piano construction," an electric piano, playing in four different ways-namely, by hand, by footpower, by electric power and by auto-electric, reproducing on handplayed rolls the work of the world's most famous musicians and singers.

Many of the business and professional men of Washington who comprise the men of Washington who comprise the membership of the club and who were present at the luncheon in record-breading numbers had been too busy to go around town and inspect the various displays which have been in progress in connection with "Electrical Prosperity week," so were treated to a private electrical display in one of the anterooms of the luncheon gathering. Every sort of device operated by electricity was displayed, through the courtesy of Rotarian E. C. Graham, and each luncheon guest found at his plate, as a souvenir guest found at his plate, as a souvenir of the occasion, a present of a new style turn-down electric lamp from Mr.
